

AGED 86, KILLS MAN AND HIMSELF

Old Farmer, Brooding Over
Imaginary Wrongs, Slays
Brother-in-Law.

HONESDALE, Pa., June 12.—Mark Van Dusen, eighty-six years old, a retired and well-to-do farmer, shot and killed his brother-in-law, George Baker, eighty-seven; tried to reach his sister, with the evident idea of shooting her also, and then, when he saw men running toward him, aimed the revolver upon himself and blew out his brain.

The tragedy, unusual owing to the advanced age of the murderer and his victim, occurred on Baker's fine farm, which is along the Dyberry Road, a few miles from Honesdale. Both men were well known throughout this section of the State, having spent most of their lives in this vicinity.

Imagined Troubles.

Van Dusen since the death of his wife has been living with the Bakers. Mrs. Baker having been his favorite sister. They got along well together for several years, and no trouble occurred until the last few weeks, when Van Dusen became imbued with the idea that he was not being treated properly by his sister and her husband; that because ill health and his advanced age made it necessary for him to have considerable care they did not want him on the farm any longer. This feeling resulted in several quarrels, but there was no open outbreak, and Mrs. Baker said that there was no cause for any misunderstanding. Her brother evidently imagined difficulties that did not exist.

The shooting was altogether unexpected. Van Dusen had made no threats and had previously made no attempts at suicide. He was alone yesterday morning. Mrs. Baker was sitting on the porch after breakfast, and her husband had gone into the barn. Van Dusen walked out of the house a few minutes afterward, did not speak to his sister and started for the barn. Mrs. Baker saw him enter, and almost immediately there was the report of a revolver.

Then Shot Himself.

Van Dusen had walked up to Baker, and without a word had shot him, the bullet entering the right cheek, penetrating his brain and killing him instantly.

The next moment Mrs. Baker saw her brother run out of the barn with the revolver in his hand. He ran toward her, and, believing that he was going to shoot her, she sprang up with a scream, seized his big dinner horn hanging near the door and pounded a call for help. Several farmhands started at full speed toward the farmhouse.

Van Dusen hesitated, and as he saw the men approaching, he placed the muzzle of the revolver at his right temple and killed himself.

The bereaved wife and sister, who is nearly eighty years old, is prostrated by the shock and is in a serious condition.

PASTOR COMMENDS DANCING

Atlanta Preacher Refuses to Let Devil Have All the Good Things.

ATLANTA, June 12.—Dancing to the sound of piano music in the First Universalist church is to be the weekly diversion of a number of young people of the church.

The Rev. E. Dean Ellenwood, the pastor, said yesterday of the dancing: "I consider dancing an innocent and healthful amusement. I don't believe in letting the devil have all the good things."

The church is planning to arrange a stage where amateur theatrical performances may be given by the Players Club of the church, which is already organized.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE

That chronic Bright's disease is now being cured by treatment that reduces inflammation in the kidneys is beginning to be generally known.

We copy the following from the San Francisco Bulletin, June 22, 1908:

"The recovery is reported of Mr. Z. Lawton, of 264 Fifth Avenue, San Francisco. The case is especially interesting, due to the fact that books declare chronic Bright's disease incurable and five city physicians had passed on and diagnosed the case. The usual symptoms found in extreme cases were reported—excessive dropsy, enlarged heart and towards the last the patient could only sleep sitting up, and for six weeks he slept in a chair. Lawton had a cousin, Mrs. W. E. Hoover, of Auburn, who also had an advanced case of Bright's disease. She had been tapped three times when she heard of Lawton's renal compound and made a full recovery. This interested Lawton in the treatment, and it resulted in his recovery also."

He is a Mason, member of Excelsior Lodge, and many members will collect his serious predicament, and that they thought they would be called on to pass him over."

Parties desiring to know more of this treatment can get full literature by addressing the John J. Fulton Company, 212 First Street, San Francisco, Cal.

Fulton's Renal Compound can be had in your city of our agent, Owens & Minor Drug Co.

We desire every patient to write—who is not noting the usual improvement by the third week.

STOCK ON MODEL FARM VICTIMS OF DISEASE

Tuberculosis Fast Decimating
Herds at Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

STARTLING REVELATIONS

Hog Cholera Epidemic Spreads
Infection in Places Where Stock Was Sold.

BLACKSBURG, Va., June 12.—Bovine tuberculosis fast decimating the cattle at the Virginia Polytechnic Institute farm and an epidemic of hog cholera that has killed off a large portion of the swine on the farm—these are the latest developments in the situation at the Institute, and these are the topics about which alumni and old students are talking to-day. The department of Animal Husbandry now holds the centre of attention, and is the source of fresh troubles for the board of visitors.

Some four years ago, it appears, the first examination of the institute herd for tuberculosis by the tuberculin test was made. A number of animals were found tuberculous, but the situation was not considered alarming. Some precautions were taken, and recently these have been redoubled, but tuberculosis is spreading very rapidly in the herd. At the last test, made in April of this year, by representatives from the Bureau of Animal Industry in Washington, out of eighty-nine head of cattle examined thirty-one head showed suspicious symptoms, and within a few days after the test a bull died of general tuberculosis.

Although experts are divided on this point, and although Dr. Robert Koch, of Berlin, maintains that bovine tuberculosis cannot be contracted by man, it has never been thought safe in this country to use the milk from tuberculous cows. The process of pasteurization, which has been in use here, tends to reduce the danger from tuberculous milk to a minimum, but it is not generally considered an absolute preventive. Some authorities, at the meeting of the American Medical Association, held in Atlantic City last week, seemed, indeed, to think pasteurized milk an actual source of danger.

The milk danger from this state of affairs, aside from the gradual reduction of the herd, is the danger of tuberculosis infection by those who drink the milk from the tuberculous cows.

Although experts are divided on this point, and although Dr. Robert Koch, of Berlin, maintains that bovine tuberculosis cannot be contracted by man, it has never been thought safe in this country to use the milk from tuberculous cows. The process of pasteurization, which has been in use here, tends to reduce the danger from tuberculous milk to a minimum, but it is not generally considered an absolute preventive. Some authorities, at the meeting of the American Medical Association, held in Atlantic City last week, seemed, indeed, to think pasteurized milk an actual source of danger.

The hog cholera epidemic, it appears, occurred last November, though details regarding it have never been given the press. The origin of the hog cholera, like the origin of the tuberculosis, seems very doubtful. At the time a hog was under experiment on the farm to produce hog cholera serum, and he may in some manner have spread the cholera, though this is doubted by many in a position to know. At all events, hog cholera spread in the herd of swine at the institute and killed between forty and fifty of the most valuable hogs on the place. As ill fortune would have it, a sale of hogs from the farm took place about this time, and before long hog cholera appeared in many places where the institute hogs had been purchased. It is reported that the board was called upon to pay numerous claims for damages on account of these hogs, but the exact amount paid out seems to be unknown to all.

In one case, at least, suit against the institute was threatened by a farmer who bought some of these hogs, but thus far, no suit has been entered.

As one thing after another is brought to light regarding the management of the institute, and as no one seems to know where the troubles will end, the friends of the school seem almost in despair. With the agricultural department a failure, with the farm a heavy annual expense and with the splendid institute herd of cattle infected with tuberculosis and the hogs recently ravaged by cholera, it is generally considered as positive that a full investigation will be undertaken by the board of visitors when they meet in July.

SEEK FOUNDLING TO MAKE HER RICH

Lawyers Searching for New York Girl, Whose Story
Reads Like Fiction.

NEW YORK, June 12.—A story stranger by far than fiction stands partly revealed through a search begun yesterday in this city for Margaret Gough, twenty years old, a foundling, who has fallen heir to a fortune through the death of a grandmother. The whereabouts of the child since she was less than two years old are unknown. Her present name is unknown. Probably even she does not know her right name or who she is. There is not one chance in a thousand, the lawyers say, that she so much as suspects there is a fortune waiting for her to come forward and claim it. She may be right here in New York in absolute ignorance of her identity and of the good luck that has befallen her. She may be in rags in a hovel, in some far-away place. She may have been adopted by some rich family bringing the child up as its own. Or she may be dead.

Get a Family Fortune.

Dead or alive, information regarding Margaret Gough is sought by Robert J. Calhane, of 64 Wall Street. She was born in December 1897, and was the daughter of Martin Gough, from whose mother the family fortune now descends to the name of the vanished grandchild. On the night of October 13, 1898, the little one was found under a stairway in the main floor in 309 East Ninety-eighth Street, and was removed to the East Eighty-eighth Street Police Station without her identity being traced.

From the station the baby was transferred to Bellevue as a foundling, and was sent a few days afterward to the Children's Hospital on Randall Island. Her name was made up when the identity of the "waif" was still uncertain to the charitable officials, and after the custom followed in the cases of foundlings, a new name was given to her—Maud Williams.

Those who are looking for the child got no further yesterday than the record of the change of her name when she was taken to Randall's Island. When she went or what happened to her after that, all mystery which may be solved by a further search among the records. Many of the city's foundlings are adopted, and many find their ways into distant parts of the country, where their names, in some instances, are changed again, thus greatly lessening the chances of tracing them in after years.

The Gough child was abandoned, it is reported, because of trouble between her parents. The police report, made at the time, was that tenants in No. 309 East Ninety-eighth Street saw a tall, stout woman enter the hallway with the little one a few minutes before the child was found, deserted, in a dark corner.

NONMAGNETIC YACHT

Vessel to Be Used by Carnegie Institution for Scientific Work.

NEW YORK, June 12.—The non-magnetic survey yacht Carnegie was launched to-day in Brooklyn. The vessel was built for the Carnegie Institution, of Washington, is intended for the use of the institution's department of research in terrestrial work, especially in observations to determine the variations constantly taking place in the magnetic needle. The absence of magnetism in the vessel's hull is expected to make the work accurate and easier. Most of the time the Carnegie will rely on her sails for motive power. She is brigantine rigged, is 125 feet long over all, and has a displacement of about 500 tons.

With the exception of the engine, pistons and cams, there is not a piece of magnetic metal in the ship. Manganese, bronze, copper and aluminum have been utilized instead.

AT HER OPEN GRAVE HE DIES

Lover, Grieving Over His Sweetheart's Death, a Suicide.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., June 12.—Brooding over the death of his fiancée, Raymond Hinzelman, twenty years old, of Bowmanstown, Pa., swallowed poison yesterday and then, hurrying to the cemetery, shot himself through the heart at the grave dug for Miss Florence Rehrl, 19 years old.

On Memorial Day the young couple were out driving and met with an accident which caused the young woman's death Wednesday of this week. A double funeral will take place tomorrow.

BOY INVENTS AIRSHIP

At Age of Fourteen Makes Ascention

LOS ANGELES, Cal., June 12.—A large number of spectators were greatly impressed by a successful ascention to a height of twenty-five feet, achieved at a school ground here yesterday by Irving Harnes, a fourteen-year-old boy, in his own aeroplane.

Harnes was cheered as his peculiar-looking machine slowly circled about the school yard, attaining each second a greater height.

When the yard had been twice circumnavigated, the lad brought his craft safely to the earth.

A Bouquet for President Taft

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

PORTLAND, ORE., June 12.—This is rose week in Portland. The city is quite mad over the queen flower, and the people are worshipping the rose with almost pagan devotion. Men leave their business and houses, and gather to gaze at the shrubs of the rose. It is doubtful if old Omar himself was a more earnest devotee of the rose than the greater part of Portland's population.

For the annual rose festival is on, and citizens are striving with each other to show the most perfect bloom. In Portland it is not the man with the automobile that can eat up the most prizes, but the amateur grower who captures the prizes is envied by all and is hailed as Portland's greatest man.

It is no small thing to capture the prizes, for there is a wealth of blooms to choose from and a great display of roses is maintained in the festival parades, autos and horses and carriages are fairly buried under the weight of the air hangs heavy with the odor of the rose.

President Taft formally opened the
